The Legend of the Bunyip lives on

Today began like many others, but the chance of being completely flooded out by the weather was hanging like the Sword of Damocles above our heads. Thankfully, the heavens kept their legs crossed and we enjoyed a day that was mostly devoid of rain. The C Groupers walked to the lilypond, which is the site of the famous Sörve bunyip. Some say that the pond was formed by the body of the Sörve bunyip; legend says that one day it's children will return to give the A Groupers one final big scare during their hike. Heh, likely story. Meanwhile, A Group hiked to Summerland Point, then reconvened at the Lõke area for fire, songs, and tea. The scavenger hunt was a big hit with B Group, it also tricked them into learning things so that's a plus too. They then retired to the old rahvastepall court for their "lõke" for more singing and games! - Darth Tomas

CORRECTIONS: Okay, I've been getting a couple of smart alecs coming up telling me this is spelled wrong or that word doesn't have the right squiggle over it. Look, I get it alright. I see them too. They're glowing beacons of my failures. Anyway here are the corrections over the last few days:

- Issue 1: - Every Kuru girl's name is spelt wrong. It was a prank okay I know how to spell your names.
- Käsitöö was spelt using regular o's, I'm sorry.
- Issue 2: - I forgot to capitalise every Kasitöö, it's important to be consistent
- Ambrose was actually quoted saying "My dog taught me that" instead of "I learnt that from my dog" which is somehow more embarrassing
- Sorry ERIK
- The Sörve trees cut off the word "and" on page 2
