Sörve experiences hottest day on record

And I ain't talkin' 'bout the heat.

Another day, another chance to prove my physical prowess over the juhüid. Not only did I hit a bullseye at archery just after calling it, I achieved victory over Arne in the sport of kings: Rahvastapall. Then someone said I stunk and should put on deoderant, rude. Anyway.

Day 2 started off a little miserable, with grey weather matching the grey faces at morning exercises. However, a reverse rain dance was made by Indrek and finally the clouds cleared, giving way to a wonderful afternoon of outdoor activities.

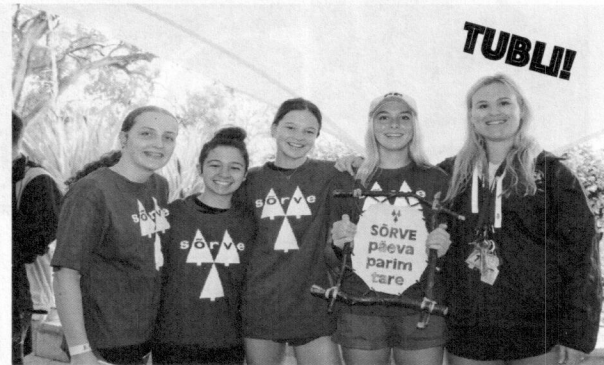

I'm not even gonna say anything about Lõke, I'll just let the photos do the talking.

Morning Activities and Inspection

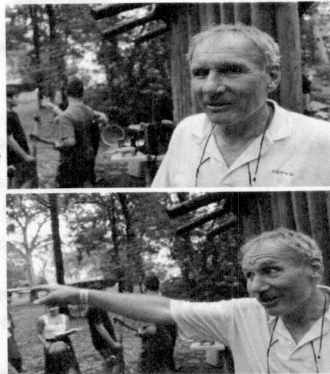

THE EST FILES

Agent Mülder and Agent Skalli arrived at Sörve this morning and immediately began taking witness statements.

"I've seen it only once before, back when I was in charge around here" Camp Elder Peter Maasep said,

"I just made a fresh jar of happukapsas and I turned my back for a second and it was gone! I saw the beast making a break towards the lily pond."

Although this claim is just heresay, it gave the agents a fresh lead in the search

THE INVIGORATING ADVENTURES OF EGGBERT THE HANDSOME SPIDER

Yesterday, Tare Kaks returned to their hut to discover a decently sized spider waiting for them. The boys affectionately called him Eggbert, however Tare Kaks was no place for a spider and he needed to be returned to his natural habitat. They called on their tare juhuid to deal with the situation. When Toomas Miirleb arrived to assess the situation, he not-so-bravely decided that this job was beyond his gender and called upon the mighty Taimi to free Eggbert from his slightly pungent prison. Taimi, sought help from above and the spirit of Steve Irwin overtook her as she swooped in and rescued the frightened boys from Eggbert. However; as Taimi freed Eggbert, Kalev the Kookaburra descended from his perch to make lunch out of Eggbert. All was lost for Eggbert, until Tare Kaks finally built up the courage to face their fears, and nobly protected Eggbert from harm. With Eggbert now safe, Tare Kaks shook all of his hands each at the same time, and bid him farewell. Live free young Eggbert!

Corrections:

Yes, you caught me, I used the same template as last year and forgot to change the date. Arrest me.
